Description

Advocacy is acting, speaking or writing to promote and protect the human rights and welfare of a vulnerable person or group of people. Examples of vulnerable people include Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples, children and their families, refugees, the elderly, the LGBTQIA community, the homeless, and people with disability. Advocacy services for people with disability in Australia are funded by The National Disability Advocacy Program (NDAP) which ensures there is no cost for participants or service providers to access advocacy services.

Types of advocacy include:

- individual advocacy – a one-on-one advocacy aimed to prevent or address instances of discrimination or abuse to a person with disability
- systemic advocacy – advocacy to influence or secure long-term changes to ensure the collective rights and interests of people with disability
- family advocacy – when a parent or family member advocates with and on behalf of a family member with disability
- group advocacy – advocacy for a group of people with disability, such as a group of people living in shared accommodation
- citizen advocacy – where community volunteers advocate for a person with a disability over the long-term, supported by a citizen advocacy organisation
- legal advocacy – where a lawyer provides legal representation, pursues positive changes to legislation, or gives legal advice to people with disability about discrimination and human rights.

Individual advocates can:

- provide direct advocacy on behalf of a person
- provide information and advice so a person can advocate for themselves (e.g. deal with a landlord, go to court, deal with police, get legal advice, negotiate deals, deal with problems at work or education, deal with guardianship and financial matters)
- connect a participant to relevant services, e.g. solicitor
- help a participant work through problems
- help a participant make formal actions on matters e.g. assist to make a complaint with the anti-discrimination board.

Advocates do not:

- provide counselling
- make decisions for another person
- provide mediation
- provide case management.

Policy

Advocacy commitment

AUSCARE SUPPORT is committed to:

- upon commencing services, informing new participants of the role of advocates, their right to use advocates and advocacy services, and how to contact and involve advocacy agencies
- support participants if they choose to self-advocate, change advocates, or withdraw their authority for an advocate
- attempting to introduce an advocate chosen by a participant if a participant needs an advocate and a family or carer cannot provide it
- if a participant requests one of our workers to be an advocate, recording their authority along with the issues important to the participant and their goals
- working with the advocate chosen by a participant and involving the advocate in all areas of the participant's service planning and decision making
- documenting whenever a participant is assisted by an advocate.
